The Differential And Integral Calculus By Love And Rainville And Mike Simpson For PC How To Download A new study reveals the disturbing trend of transgender teenagers attempting to conceal their real gender. The issue is raised in a report from the Centers for Disease Control, which indicates that transgender-identifying teens who have not yet undergone gender reassignment procedures are attempting to conceal their true gender by appearing in public as the opposite gender. "By and large, we see all the concerns and issues around transgender kids and transgender teens and the discrimination, the bullying, the suicides in this article, it's really the same problems," said Dr. Susan Brink, a pediatric urologist and researcher at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston. She continued, "We have the same issues that we've had with LGBTQ youth for 40 or 50 years and now we're adding the new element of transgender youth." The report by the CDC raises concerns about a host of issues faced by transgender teens, including cyberbullying, access to health care, bullying in school, gender confirmation, and suicide. The data cited in the report was drawn from the National Survey of Children's Health, which questioned nearly 70,000 adolescents about their experiences with gender identity issues. According to the survey results, the teenagers who identified as transgender or did not identify as either male or female were four times more likely to attempt suicide than other teens. "Before now, because this population has been relatively invisible and difficult to track, we're learning more and more about it," Brink said. "We're trying to learn from this new cohort of youth." In addition to attempting suicide, the survey found that transgender teens are twice as likely to be victims of violent crimes, though the report didn't detail what kind of crimes transgender kids were targeted for. While it's difficult to know why transgender teens commit suicide, according to Brink, the most obvious clue is the inability to access the medical care they need to be able to live their truth. She also mentioned that gender confirmation, in the form of surgeries and hormone treatments, is expensive. "The states have recognized that it's a health issue and have spent tens of millions of dollars on gender confirmation surgery," Brink said. "That's really expensive 50b96ab0b6
